Introduction

2007-2008 was another great year for UFV. On April 21, 2008 BC Premier Gordon Campbell announced university status for UCFV. On September 1, 2008 we become the University of the Fraser Valley! This means:

- ♦ Local access to excellent academic and trades education, from upgrading through to Master's degrees
- ♦ Greater capacity to engage in research activity directly related to regional needs
- ♦ Credentials recognized and understood the world over
- ♦ Increased social and economic development in the region

As a teaching-intensive university, UFV is committed to offering students as many opportunities as possible to engage, together with their professors and fellow students, in scientific and scholarly inquiries and to actively participate in the process of discovery.

Research allows students and faculty to learn together, to wrestle with the questions of their time, and to expand their own knowledge.

We are dedicated to finding creative ways to integrate research and teaching, and to place research and scholarly activities at the heart of the learning experience of our students, our faculty, and our community.

This fourth edition of Publications and Research at UFV is intended to highlight the research activities and achievements of our faculty, staff, and students in 2007-2008. It also serves as a source document in responding to community inquiries about publications and research undertaken at UFV.

Journal of Historical Biography

The Journal of Historical Biography is an international, peer-reviewed online journal published at UFV. The JHB publishes original scholarly articles on all aspects of historical biography and relevant book reviews. Our international Editorial Board includes well known scholars from such institutions as Cambridge, York University, the National University of Ireland, University of Sydney, and Smith College in Massachusetts, among others. The first edition was launched in the spring of 2007, including a special introductory print run, and a subsequent edition appeared in the fall. Volume 3 will soon be online for spring 2008, and volumes 1 and 2 are archived with open access on our website. The scholarly response to the JHB has been very encouraging, and we have received a number of high quality submissions from around the world.

Centres and institutes

Institute of Research on Citizenship and Culture

Attributes of citizenship include a sense of public identity, rights, obligations, participation in public affairs and acceptance of basic societal values. Increased awareness of what constitutes good citizenship is fostered by an explicit attention to its historical, political, cultural, gender and socio-economic dimensions. Projects carried by researchers in a variety of disciplines explore such issues. The website is located at www.ufv.ca/Institute_of_Research_on_Citizenship

CCJR is dedicated to the development and implementation of cutting edge methodologies and techniques for the study of criminal and social justice issues. In addition, it is committed to the expansion of criminal justice research innovation and research into the root causes of crime, crime prevention, crime hot spots and reduction programming, repeat victimization analysis, prolific offenders, justice operations including the economics/costs of crime and the evaluation of public safety initiatives.

The Centre is focusing on interoperability between justice and urban databases, agent-based modeling, process simulations for experimentation, computational intensive approaches and new visualization techniques. The centre represents a partnership between academics, Sun Microsystems Canada and criminal justice partners, including the police. The website is located at www.ccjr.ca

Centre for Education and Research on Aging (CERA)

The UFV Centre for Education and Research on Aging aims to facilitate a collaborative process between educators, researchers, practitioners, students, elders and caregivers in the Fraser Valley to learn more about the issues of the aging process. The centre's main focus is the understanding of aging as a process, including but not exclusive to the issues and challenges of older adults. On May 27th, 2008, CERA hosted its 3rd annual symposium entitled, "Aging in the Fraser Valley". For more information please visit the website located at www.ufv.ca/aging.htm

UFV FIELDS Centre

Over the past academic year, a task force of faculty and staff has been working to develop a research and education centre that will foster and support collaborative, interdisciplinary and community-based projects in sustainability. The new centre has been tentatively named the FIELDS Centre (FIELDS stands for Fraser Valley Initiative in Environment, Learning, and Developing Sustainability). The FIELDS Centre will 1) function as a nexus for those with similar research interests in sustainability; 2) serve as a resource for UFV and neighbouring communities; 3) create research and education connections between community organizations, businesses, and academia; and 4) foster student involvement in sustainability research.

The FIELDS Centre will become operational during the Fall 2008. For more information, contact Dr. Michelle Rhodes, at michelle.rhodes@ufv.ca

Centre for Indo-Canadian Studies

The Centre for Indo-Canadian Studies at UFV (CICS) promotes interdisciplinary research and scholarship relating to India and the Indo-Canadian communities of British Columbia. The CICS is a place for a wide range of learning activities and resource materials. It is partnering with other academic institutes in India and will soon become a national information repository, and a site for valuable social, cultural, and economic research. The CICS is also the home of the BC Regional Economic Development Chair in Canada-India Business and Economic Development. The Centre provides a vehicle for the Chair to engage in close collaborations with the drivers of BC's economy as well as business and academic partners in India. The website is located at www.ufv.ca/CICS.htm

Institute for International Cooperation and Community Development

UFV is in the early stages of the formation of an Institute for International Cooperation and Community Development, the intent of which will be to promote and facilitate international research and study at UFV, particularly in the areas of sustainable human and community development. Recognizing the interconnectedness that has been intensified by processes of globalization, IICCD will favour an integrated approach that links local and global concerns.

Luminescence Dating Research Laboratory

The UFV Luminescence Dating Research Laboratory is a state-of-the-art facility built around the most current luminescence dating system manufactured by Risø National Laboratory in Denmark. The laboratory, which is housed in the UFV Geography Department (Abbotsford campus), became operational in September 2007, and is supported by National Science and Engineering Research Council of Canada (NSERC) grants awarded to its director, Dr. Olav B. Lian. The laboratory not only serves as a centre for leading edge research, but is also a place where senior UFV students can be mentored in the processes by which key research problems are identified, new knowledge is acquired, and, in turn, is applied to solving problems in environmental science.

Luminescence dating is a method that is used to find out how much time has elapsed since common mineral grains (e.g., sand grains in a desert dune) were last exposed to sunlight. The method is therefore used to establish the timing of landform change which can, in turn, be used as a direct proxy for environmental (e.g., climate) change. The initial focus of the research in the new UFV laboratory will be associated with gaining an understanding of how the landscape in British Columbia adjusted to the fluctuations in climate that have occurred since the end of the last ice age.

For more information please contact Dr. Olav B. Lian at olav.lian@ufv.ca
